

What Is Occupational Health?

Occupational Health actively promotes and maintains good health in the workplace, ensures legal compliance and supports employers and employees when health problems occur.

Investing in the health of your employees will make that difference. Making Occupational Health a core function of your business recognises your corporate and social responsibilities.

Demonstrating your commitment to the health of your staff will have a hugely positive impact on your customers.

What are the benefits to you?

- Improved staff motivation and performance
- Better staff attendance and retention
- Increased productivity
- Reduction in sickness absence levels
- Reduced risk and cost of litigation
- Increased profitability

How can Queens Road Occupational Health help you?

Queens Road Medical Practice is a leading provider of Occupational Health services in Guernsey.

We aim to deliver a flexible range of pro-active, forward thinking and cost effective services designed to meet the needs of modern business.

Occupational Health focused on your needs

An Occupational Health service is an integral part of a company's commitment to its workforce. All companies are unique and their hazard and risk profiles will be quite different. As such, our service is flexible and matched to each client's specific needs. Our success lies in working as part of your team.

Queens Road Medical Practice offers an initial review of your premises/operations before proposing a suitable package. The content of each package will be tailored to your needs.

With an established Occupational Health Team, we have the expertise to advise on and deliver the package that is appropriate to your workplace and environment
